===== Patients with sepsis develop a cascade of inflammatory mediators that leads to the activation of endothelial cells and the migration and adhesion of neutrophils. The aim of our study was to assess the impact of heparin on the adhesion of neutrophils to human endothelial cells exposed to lipopolysaccharide (LPS). Methods ===== Endothelial cells (HUVEC) were treated with heparin or HEPES buffer for 24 hours. Cells were treated with LPS or not, for 1 hour and then the expression of CD11b/CD18 integrin, CD36 and CD44 were analyzed by flow cytometry. The migration of neutrophils towards HUVEC was assessed in Transwell plates, with or without heparin. Results ===== LPS had no effect on the expression of CD11b/CD18, CD36 and CD44 on endothelial cells when compared with untreated cells. HEPES treatment induced a significant downregulation of CD11b/CD18. HEPES and heparin treatment did not modify CD11b/CD18 and CD36 expression. On the other hand, CD44 expression increased after heparin treatment. Heparin increased the LPS-dependent endothelial cell-induced migration of neutrophils. Conclusions ===== Heparin treatment of endothelial cells induced the expression of CD44 while modulating the expression of adhesion molecules and migration.
